A VISITING PRINCESS.

The Spanish court was always noted for its punctilious etiquette. All the school histories of [illegible] to contain the story of the Spanish king who was burned to death because it was not proper for him to remove himself even from a hot stove. A modern instance of the same devotion to the forms of court ceremony is found in the discussions which have preceded the visit of the Infanta Eulalia to this country, concerning her proper reception and treatment. One might think that a visitor from a foreign country would be interested in manners of republican simplicity and in the contrast which they present with those of the Old World. The Spanish grandees, however, have no such curiosity. They intend that the Infanta shall be treated with all the courtesy due her exalted rank, and to ensure this they even took steps to find out the manner of her reception before announcing definitely that her visit would take place.

The chief point of discussion was whether after the Princess reached Washington and made a formal call upon the President, Mr. Cleveland would return the call in due form. As it is announced that the Princess is on her way, the Washington government must have found it possible to give satisfactory assurances, a conclusion which is of course eminently satisfactory to the two nations.

The Infanta Eulalia, the distinguished visitor who is making so much trouble, is an aunt of the 7-year-old king who now holds right to the Spanish throne. She is the youngest of the three sisters of Alfonzo XII, the late king, is 29 years old, and was married some seven years ago to the Duke of Montpensier. But in addition to her own dignities the Infanta also claims precedence as the personal representative of her sister-in-law the Queen Regent, Maria Christina, the mother of the boy king. We trust that the Princess will receive all the consideration to which she is entitled, and that she may be delighted with her trip to the new world.

AN EXPERIMENT IN SUFFRAGE.

As an outcome of the recent disturbances in Belgium that country will soon inaugurate an experiment in suffrage, which will be watched with interest by all free peoples. On April 15 the Belgian Chambers passed the Nyssen bill whose provisions are summarized as follows: Every male Belgian who has reached the 25th year of his age and has lived for one year in an election district is entitled to vote unless he has been deprived of his rights of citizenship for criminal actions. A citizen over 35 years of age, who is married or who is a widower with children, shall be entitled to an additional vote if his direct personal taxes amount to at least 5 francs ($1). A citizen of 25, owning real estate valued at not less than 2000 francs ($400) or drawing interest to the amount of not less than 100 francs ($20) on government bonds, or government savings banks, shall be entitled to another vote. A citizen of 25 who has passed college examinations, or is in a position which cannot be held without such examinations, will also have an additional vote. No one is to have more than three votes, and voting will be obligatory.

The most striking feature of the new law is that which gives extra votes to taxpayers and property owners. This is a curious modification of the principle of universal suffrage, and one whose value can only be determined by actual experiment.

A railway train will always be ahead of a steamship in point of speed; but steamships are now reaching velocities that would once have been considered very respectable even for railway trains. Some of the new cruisers of the United States will be capable of twenty miles an hour, and some of the torpedo boats considerably excel this. The fastest merchant vessel in the world is undoubtedly the new Cunarder Campania, which recently made the trip from New York to Liverpool in five days, seventeen hours and twenty-seven minutes, the fastest eastward passage on record. After deducting the sailing time 17 miles an average of 22½ miles an hour. The driving of a great vessel 620 feet in length, through the waters at that rate of speed is certainly a wonderful accomplishment. Of course as a matter of speed it does not compare with the railway record, but under its peculiar conditions the accomplishment of the Campania is worthy to be set along side of the 82 second mile of the New York Central express as among the great feats of the Columbian year.

Monday is minister's holiday, and the Denver ministers this week showed their appreciation of the fact by indulging in a game of baseball. In so doing they not only secured a considerable amount of amusement for themselves, but gave much more amusement to others. The reporters especially seem to have been happy at the reversal of the usual conditions and improved their opportunity to the utmost. When the [illegible] is in the pulpit and the reporter has to sit meekly and quietly in the pew, the latter is at a disadvantage, but when the minister stands up in his shirt sleeves with a bat in his hand, the conditions are reversed. However no harm was done after all, and the game seems to have been enjoyed by all concerned, ministers, reporters and public, in the most hearty, good natured fashion.

There is some talk of war with China as a result of an attempt to enforce the Geary law. We do not believe that such an occurrence is likely, although critical conditions may easily arise both on account of the Geary law and of the retaliatory measures which China is ready to adopt. It is probable, however, that a strict policy of non interference will be put into effect. American commercial interests in China will be completely destroyed, no doubt much to the satisfaction of other nations who are our commercial rivals, and American missionaries will be forced to withdraw from the country, while thousands of our countrymen who were in that country and [illegible] will be up in the air.

The preliminary bulletin of the Summer School, mention of which has already been made in these columns, has now made its appearance and can be obtained by application to Professor Dye, [illegible] or to Mr. N. [illegible]. The bulletin, although quite small, sets forth in attractive detail the various good things for those who will be fortunate enough to participate in it. The management of the school are certainly meeting with remarkable success in securing instructors of the highest rank and they deserve the most liberal support from the community.

The advocates of Sunday opening seem to have won a decisive victory and it is announced that the Fair will open on Sunday, the same as any other day with the exception that the machinery will not be in motion, and that the money given by Congress will be returned. If the Fair is to be open on Sundays at all, this is the best way to do it. It is contrary to the wishes of the American people as expressed through their representatives in Congress, but at least there is nothing sneaking about it as there was in the other plans proposed.

The number of the Chicago Graphic for April 15 contains a well written and handsomely illustrated article on the State University of Colorado. There is abundant room for pride on the part of all citizens of the State both in the attractiveness and beauty of the location and in the excellent character of the work which is being done under the direction of President Baker.

A School With a Future.

The Colorado Summer School of Colorado Springs will hold its second session from July [illegible] to August 1st, as has been announced. The statement will be regarded with interest by the many who found the school helpful last year, and by many more who have heard of the results already attained. Colorado Springs is an ideal place for such an institution, and there will be [illegible] of those who attend the session. The people of Colorado Springs [illegible] pride in the school and great things may be predicted for the future.—Denver Times.

Table Decoration.

The fashion of beautifying the table, which in these days is carried to such an extent, is by no means so original as many claim it to be. It is simply the revival of a revived custom. We are told that in France when the great joints grew distasteful and small dishes took their place decorations of the table changed too. Permanent pieces called "dormants," or "surtouts," made of crystal and mounted in silver were placed in the middle of the table and from them branched candelabra of gilt and silver, vases, [illegible] covered with sweetmeats, or here as before statuettes.

Finally the surtout grew so large that it almost covered the table. People at last grew tired of the monotony of this ornament, no matter how artistic it might be, and instead the center of the table was often covered with a layer of potter's clay, in which a florist would set cut flowers in any design that pleased him. Artists were often employed to decorate the table the center of which would be covered with temples, bridges, amphitheaters or emblematic groups of figures, all made of paste.

Sometimes the artist would represent a landscape covered with snow. M. Carnda invented an artificial frost, which was melted by the heat of the room, during which process the guests saw the thawing of the river and the budding of the trees and flowers as spring succeeded winter. There were also the "tableaux," who, by means of beautifully colored candle, powdered marble, ground glass, beads and bead crumbs, made very ingenious figures upon the table cloths.—Harper's Bazar.

Hydrophobia Nothing but Fear.

Says a medical practitioner of long experience: "I believe that a good many people who are supposed to die of hydrophobia scare themselves to death. They are bitten by a dog—perhaps a harmless dog, usually—and they brood over it and worry about it until they develop all the symptoms of hydrophobia. I should test every case of alleged poisoning by rabies by putting the patient under chloroform and watching him during the stupor when he was coming out of it. If the convulsions continued then the case would be genuine, but if it [illegible] fear [illegible] the commencement of [illegible] injuries. Even a mad dog may bite a man without producing any ill effects."—New York Sun.

RELICS OF COLUMBUS

TO BE SEEN AT THE WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

It Is Reproduced to Exact Size at the World's Fair Grounds—Order of Special Interest to Visitors—Homage Paid to Columbus in the Way of Statuary.

World's Fair, May 15.—[Special.]—If Christopher Columbus could return to earth and pass a day in Jackson park he would forgive those ecclesiastical sovereigns of his who put him in charge of the murderous world which was so slow in acknowledging his unparalleled service to civilization. Not only is this great exposition named after the discoverer, and held to commemorate the fourth centenary of his most noble exploit, but his spirit dominates everything. It is to him that these modern men in adoration and praise with their paint brush and modeling tool, their pointing and statuary. It is indeed the Columbian fair. Pleasant indeed in the eyes of the Duke of Veragua must have been these manifestations of homage to his great ancestor.

When the visitor who comes by elevated railway or excursion train leaves the magnificent terminal station and first casts his eager glance about the White City, his attention is at once attracted by the golden models of the caravels which brought Columbus to these shores, now poised high in the air at the top of the [illegible] poles in the court surrounding the crescent-like Administration building. Gaily they ride the breeze on the poles on their lofty perches, reminding the visitor at the very outset of the historical event in whose honor this whole enterprise was conceived. From other points the yellow-and-black banners of Castile and Aragon, the principalities of Ferdinand and Isabella, and thus prepared the way for Columbus and his quest in the service of these sovereigns. In front of the Administration building stands a statue of Columbus upon a lofty pedestal, in the proudest spot of the most central court where nearly all the world will soon be passing.

Chicago, under eagerness to build, conquer, attract and plant has by no means [illegible] Columbus if Spain were not. In the most conspicuous and [illegible] place of the central part of the city of Chicago, in the "lake front" park which was originally designed to be the site of this exposition, directly in front of the famous Auditorium, stands a bronze Columbus unveiled two weeks ago. It was the work of a successful American sculptor, Howard Kyle Hunt, and its cost was defrayed by the municipality, and the management of the exposition jointly. In front of Chicago's city hall stands a handsome drinking fountain named for Columbus and ornamented with another statue of the discoverer.

Returning to the exposition, the sculptured or painted Columbus is seen on every hand. His best is in niche, his portrait must [illegible] full figure, a relief in marble, or his discovery portrayed in mural painting. Columbus is a favorite theme with artists from all over the world—the nations vie in rendering him homage.

At the most impressive point of the exposition, the water entrance, stands still another Columbus. Crowning the noble Columbian arch—of the Corinthian style, surrounded by heroic figures typical of the races of man, is the Quadriga, already known far and near as one of the most beautiful of the creations of the exposition. He is here represented as riding in the chariot of a conqueror drawn by four horses, each animal led by a goddess. Victory, history, art and industry join to lead Columbus in triumph back to the world which his faith and daring brought within the domain of civilization. It was a beautiful conception and has been splendidly executed.

Within gunshot of the Quadriga stands one of the most interesting structures in this aggregation of the marvelous. It is the Convent of La Rabida, reproduced here in a full-sized and accurate model. So well has the work been done that at first glance travelers who have visited Spain are startled at what seems to them to be the old convent itself transplanted by some modern Yankee magician from its rocky home in Spain to the shore of Lake Michigan. It stands just south of the great pier and [illegible] building, occupying a little corner of its own where it was believed it would be comparatively safe from harm by fire should the disaster of a general conflagration ever overtake the World's fair. This precaution was taken on account of the precious nature of the Columbus relics and documents which the convent is the repository. The same anxiety to guard against accident led the United States authorities to promise Spain that if the precious relics were sent across the sea they should be guarded by military. A promise that has been faithfully kept and night or day Uncle Sam's blue-coats patrol the ancient structure, indoors and out.

La Rabida has a history not less stormy than that of Columbus himself. According to tradition it was built in the halcyon days of Rome to commemorate the virtues of a daughter of the Emperor Trajan, and it was for a long time a hotel of refuge of criminals or persecuted persons fleeing for life. Once a year two maidens were sacrificed on the altar, and from an examination of their entrails the soothsayers were able to foretell famine, war or pestilence. It was in time a Christian church, a Moslem mosque, and a chapter-house of the Knights Templar. In the present century it degenerated into a resort for gypsies, beggars and all sorts of vagrants and wanderers. Finally it became a sort of sheepfold, and was not restored to its present state of good preservation till the Queen Dowager of France, visiting it forty years ago, started a subscription list for its redemption.

Four hundred and eight years ago occurred the most memorable [illegible] in the history of the ancient monastery. Columbus and his son Diego, then nine years old, paused before its walls. They were weary and hungry, and the boy fainted at the door. Juan Perez, the prior, gave them shelter, and becoming interested in his [illegible] and a [illegible] audience at court. The visit of Columbus to Rabida was a crisis in his career and in the history of the world, and therefore appropriate it is that a model of the monastery should serve here as a sort of Columbian museum.

No visitor will want to leave the World's Fair without seeing these relics. It is surprising that so many souvenirs of the discovery could have been gathered together at this late day. The anchor which Columbus says he lost in the harbor of San Domingo, and which was afterward recovered from the ooze, [illegible] is [illegible] here. During one of his first voyages Columbus founded in the West Indies the first American city and named it Isabella. The United States government sent a commission to find and identify Isabella, [illegible] as much of it as might be possible, and reproduce the whole at the fair. There was little difficulty in finding the site, but there was no remains of sufficient form or interest to be worth restoration or reproduction. Nothing was found but the foundations of a few rude stone walls, and these were in a sadly scattered condition. Some of these stones were brought away and may be seen in Rabida—mute witnesses of the first known efforts of Europeans to construct a town in the western world.

There are many other relics of Columbus, among them a bell which he brought from Spain to Isabella for a chapel he proposed building at Isabella, a stone and one of the cast-iron bolts, autograph letters written by the discoverer, armor, equipments and articles of personal use. An assortment of the trinkets used by him in his barter with the Indians is not without interest. These are beads, knives, hand mirrors, cloths and combs. There are models of the house in which he resided, and of the coffin in which his remains, after [illegible] were believed to have been [illegible] the cathedral at Santo Domingo. A Bible was published a few days ago that an attempt had been made to show the remains of Columbus from Rabida, but this was an obvious error, for the remains of Columbus are not at the exposition and no pretense has ever been made that they are there.

There is a model of the house in which Columbus was born, and a series of pictures representing every important incident of his career. Among these is a picture of the [illegible] before the court of [illegible] and the same Columbus returning from a later voyage in chains.

In another part of the convent is shown a fine statue of the room in which Columbus and his son rested on the occasion of their memorable visit in 1485. Nearby are the cells which the monks occupied, their walls artfully discolored in imitation of the stains of antiquity. The illusion is somewhat marred by the use to which the cells are now put; they are sleeping rooms for the soldiers who stand guard over these precious relics.

If any one wishes to select for himself the portrait of Columbus which in his judgment is most likely to be the true one, he may do so from an array of half a hundred originals. As is well known, no authenticated portrait of Columbus exists, though in favor of one or two paintings there is strong circumstantial evidence. If one could discover in some Spanish ruin a portrait of Columbus about whose authenticity there was no lingering doubt, he could consider his fortune made, for probably he could sell it for half a million dollars. The chances are that if such a discovery were made, the painting brought to Chicago it would never be suffered to leave. If money could buy it, in Chicago it would remain.

Even now there is discussion of a proposed temple to the memory of Columbus to be erected in Chicago, either on the site of the present exposition or elsewhere in the city. The designs for the temple have been prepared in Italy, and photographs of them are now in Chicago. If erected it will at once take rank as one of the most beautiful structures in the world. It will be a marble colonnade of classic design, and in and about it the progressive story of Columbus' great career will be told in a series of sculptured figures. This temple will not be erected till after the exposition shall have closed. While not much is known as yet as to the plans of its projector, it is believed the beautiful memorial will be presented to Chicago by King Humbert of Italy as a mark of the pride [illegible] of which he was a native.

AN EPOCH IN JOURNALISM.
The New York Sunday Press is regularly publishing an Art Cover in seven colors.
On Sunday, March 12, the Sunday Press (New York), startled a feature that will mark an epoch in American Journalism. It consists of an Art Cover, in which the paper when folded to the quarter size, is encased, and it has created an unprecedented demand for the Sunday Press among all classes of people.
The front page of the Art Cover, next Sunday, will show a beautiful reproduction of the German masterpiece, "St. Cecilia," and for the four Sundays in April it will present an original water-color design with an art editor, an original painting in the original colors by an American artist, and two pen sketches of famous paintings, admitted masterpieces. The inside pages of the Art Cover will always contain exquisite half-tone portraits and illustrations of people and topics of the moment.
Every copy of the Art Cover of each issue of the Sunday Press would command a price of ten cents at least.

Correct Order.

Mr. Samuel Hoffenstein, of Minneapolis, has been married twice, and has been the father of twenty children, ten by each wife. He has a large family Bible, in which he has recorded the births of his children. Some of the entries are peculiar. For instance, the record of the birth of his first child reads: "Born, Sept. 1, 1860, Jacob Hoffenstein, weight 8 pounds." The next entry is: "Born, Sept. 1, 1860, Rebecca Hoffenstein, weight 7 pounds." Then comes: "Born, Sept. 1, 1860, Solomon Hoffenstein, weight 6 pounds." Mr. Hoffenstein's wife died in 1870, and he married again. His second wife died in 1880, and he married a third time. Mr. Hoffenstein's third wife is the mother of the youngest child, which is now 3 years old.

Her Credentials.

An ancient legend tells us that the angel on guard at the door of heaven was once asked by an inquisitive person if man's mail or merchandise was ever passed through.

"More married men," he promptly answered.

"Indeed!" said the questioner, who was a man, and who immediately began to plume himself. "Their credentials, critic of course admitted them. That was right. The strongest should get the weaker."

"No," replied the angel, that is not the reason.

"Then what is it?"

"Well, if you must know," said the angel confidentially, "we pass them first on account of the scarcity of the article."

Distinct in Animals.

"I don't know what to make of Jones," said Smith. "He's always talking about what he is pleased to term the instinct of some of his friends.

"You couldn't have been with me on the plains," replied Brown, "or you would have noticed that I displayed a little instinct myself."

"For instance, I gave a young rat a cage with a trouble-bird attachment. The trouble-bird promptly ran over and told that rat similar tales to those which shook that horse's confidence in me. Then I gave the rat a nice, comfortable home, and the

For the last three years Rev. H. H. Bell, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, has conducted a union Bible class for Sunday school teachers at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. To show their appreciation of his interest in the work and of his faithfulness as a leader and teacher, about twenty-five members of the class surprised him at his home last evening and presented him with a handsome easy chair. It was a genuine surprise, and after all had been seated Dr. J. K. Robinson made a brief speech of presentation and the recipient responded for himself and Mrs. Bell. Refreshments were afterward served by the ladies of the ——.

A telegram received in the city yesterday announced a serious accident to Thomas Strachan at Glenwood Springs the day previous. The particulars were meagre but it seems that he was with a burro party when the animal he was riding stumbled and fell and his head struck a stone. His skull was fractured and it is feared the injury will prove fatal. He is about 21 years of age and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Strachan of this city. His mother and sister were with him at the time of the accident, and his brother Archie left for Glenwood last night. The young man has been employed as stenographer in the bank at Glenwood for some time. It was to return here and take a position the first of June.

A NATIONAL PERPLEXITY.

It would be difficult if not impossible to find in American history a parallel to the situation of the government consequent upon the declaration by the Supreme Court of the constitutionality of the Geary Chinese exclusion act. The position of the cabinet while asserting in grieved surprise that they never expected that the act would be declared constitutional, is certainly not a dignified one but it is easily understood when the dilemma before them is considered. The enforcement of the act would involve the expenditure of several millions of dollars which Congress has not appropriated, it would involve peculiar hardships to Americans in China, and close our western seaports against the richest commerce of the Pacific. On the other hand to leave the law as a dead letter on the statute book is an alternative wholly unpleasant and objectionable.

It is worth noting that the intention of the law was not to secure the deportation of the Chinese now in this country, but to effectually prevent any further importations. The former law against the immigration of Coolies has been rendered ineffectual on account of the ease with which smuggling operations could be conducted across the borders, and the impossibility of recognizing illegal immigrants as soon as they were once safely within the limits of the United States. It was sought to obviate this difficulty by providing for the registration of all Chinese living here, and for the deportation of all found without the proper certificate. If the Chinese had accepted the law and registered themselves as required by its provisions the present difficulty would have been largely obviated, but acting under the advice of the Six Companies they refused to register and resolved to abide by the decision of the courts in regard to the constitutionality of the law.

Under the circumstances, that most [illegible] done is to make the best of a bad matter. No way has yet been suggested by which the Chinese can be sent back without money to pay their passages. The only way then seems to be to continue the policy in force since the 5th of May, when the law took effect, and temporarily to suspend its operations. When Congress meets it will have the opportunity to repeal the cruel and unjust law, or to provide the means for its enforcement. The Geary law was hurried through in order to meet the emergency of the supposed expiration of the Chinese restriction law then in force. Had it not been so hurried it is reasonable to suppose that it would not have passed in its present form. The coming Congress should rectify its worst features. As it stands it is a national disgrace.

THE KINGDOM OF NORWAY.

Yesterday was celebrated as a national holiday by two widely different peoples. The aristocratic and haughty Spaniards observed it as the seventeenth day of their bull fights, while to the simple and kindly Norwegians it recalled their declaration of national independence, being the seventy-ninth anniversary of that event. It was in 1814 that the royal line of Norway failed of male heirs and the daughter of the last king carried the crown to the Swedish line. With Sweden Norway entered into a union with Denmark in 1397, and when the union was broken at the beginning of the Sixteenth century Norway remained with Denmark. By the treaty of Kiel, January 14, 1814, Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark to the King of Sweden, but this transfer was not agreeable to the people of Norway who declared themselves independent, assembled a Constituent Assembly, adopted a constitution on May 17th, and elected the Danish Prince Christian as their king. No serious opposition, however was offered to the entrance of the Swedish troops to the country, and in August the convention of Moss declaring the union of the two countries on terms expressly securing Norway's independence was proclaimed. The following year the Swedish king was also elected king of Norway.

Although for the greater part of her history Norway has been nominally subject to foreign powers her people have been impatient of foreign domination, and of late years a strong national spirit has been manifested. The Norwegians as a people are much more enterprising than their Swedish neighbors and the country has a commerce out of all proportion to its size and population. The general celebration of the anniversary of its independence is another manifestation of the spirit which has led to the demand for a separate consular representation in foreign countries, and has caused parliamentary troubles of a somewhat serious nature within the past few months.

GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Among recent deaths worthy of especial mention is that of General S. C. Armstrong, founder of the Hampton Institute. [illegible] The son of a veteran missionary, having been born in the Sandwich Islands. He came to this country at an early age, and his education and sentiment were thoroughly American. He served in the Union army with success as was attested by frequent promotions, and at the close became connected with the Freedmen's Bureau. In 1868 he founded the Hampton Institute, which was at first devoted entirely to the task of the education of Negro teachers. About ten years later Indians began to be admitted, and the present yearly attendance is about two hundred Indians and between two hundred and one thousand Negroes. It would be difficult to make an estimate upon the benefits of such a practical instrument of good, but it is certain that at his death General Armstrong merits the respect of his fellow countrymen and a generous [illegible] of his labors.

[illegible] of the Canton Valais has been revived by a statement said to have been made by Mr. Gladstone, that the Priests [illegible] favored the establishment. Such a step, however, would [illegible] Cantons should abandon its traditional theory of the complete separation of church and state and [illegible] to a policy ecclesiastical dictatory.

The [illegible] meeting of the Arkansas Valley Fair association is to be held at Rocky Ford on June 1 and 2, following the spring meetings at Albuquerque and Trinidad. An attractive racing programme has been arranged, and it is announced that first class competitors have been secured for the various purses. Quite a [illegible] to the host to be present, and the success of the event is entirely probable.

[illegible] ment in Nicaragua seems to have captured the popular fancy, and President Solorza is in a fair way to be driven from his eminent position. The affair has gained in importance by the falling into the hands of the insurgents of the Nicaraguan canal works. A United States man of war has been sent to protect American interests, which were somewhat endangered.

Nearly every day continues to bring news of the suspension of one or more Australian banks, and there is no sign that the crisis is near an end. The latest announcement concerns the Royal bank of Queensland. It is rather surprising that so many failures of such magnitude have not created more financial disturbance than they appear to have done.

Colorado has already begun to receive some benefit from the foreign visitors to the World's Fair, although the number is as yet small. No effort should be spared to increase the numbers, for on them this summer's prosperity of the State largely depends.

The first subject considered at the Woman's Congress was dress. No uncomplimentary allusion is intended. The subject is one of prime importance and merits consideration.

A Retreat to Capital Punishment.

It is remarkable that the punishment of death has been re-established by the people of the Canton Schaffhausen, by public vote, [illegible] capital punishment. But brutal crimes increased to such an alarming extent that in 1868 this article was again removed from the Constitution. Thus it was, the Cantons were thereby given liberty to act for themselves in the matter. Since then capital punishment has been again introduced in Oberwalden, Uri, Appenzell, Valais, Zug, St. Gallen, Lorez and Schwyz, that is [illegible] in the original Cantons, which are also Catholic. Now Schaffhausen follows suit, and it is very probable that shortly the death penalty will be declared in effect in every part of Switzerland. No other reason than the increase of atrocious crimes can be found for this.—Journal Des Debats, Paris.

Untimely Criticism.

Untimely criticism is a barrier, stunting and [illegible] from its [illegible] tendency. "Don't wriggle your feet so, my son," says the critical father to a boy vibrant with enthusiasm. The correction could have waited, and the boy, with dampened ardor, turns away, telling his next story elsewhere, while the father some day wonders why boys are sealed books to their elders. "Where did you find that dreadful crayon?" Mary says to John in the midst of his cheerful salutation, when he is just about to tell her of a bit of good fortune. "Such silly [illegible] conventionality," says John, with a shrug of indifference, to Mary at some new thought springing out of her heart, dewy as freshness as a newly plucked rose. And John and Mary each grow to mourn the fact that the best of the other finds its fragrance elsewhere.

There are hundreds of old painters—the dealers, the [illegible], the [illegible], the critics, the [illegible] of social and artistic circles, the [illegible] personal peculiarities.—Harper's Bazar.

Viking Ship En Route.

Twelve lately Norwegian sailors under an experienced navigator are now piloting across the Atlantic a reproduction of the Viking ship of old, the peculiar craft in which the warlike Norsemen gained naval renown. The vessel designed for exhibition at the World's fair, and will come to Chicago by way of the Erie canal and the lakes. She is an exact copy of an old ship literally unearthed in Norway, when an inquisitive native, being anxious to discover the contents of a mound, dug it up, and brought to light the resting hull of a Viking ship, with the armor-clad skeleton of its owner on the inside. The warrior had been buried with his weapons and the [illegible] Norse government has lent the particular ship made and the movement to send the ship to Chicago proved very popular in Norway.

A NOVELIST'S VIEWS.

MARION CRAWFORD'S OBSERVATIONS ABOUT AMERICA.

Changes in American Taste for Art and Better Architecture—American Hurry and Worry Is Imputed by a Lack of Traditions.

"What changes in this country have impressed me most since my last visit?" repeated Mr. F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, as he bent over his large trunk which he was packing for his departure homeward. "I have noticed so many changes that it is difficult for me to put my impressions in shape. When I came here 10 years ago, after long residence in Europe and in the east, I was most struck by the remarkable growth of the cities that I saw; but during my present visit I have been particularly impressed by the development in taste which I have noticed among the people here.

"It seems to me that my brother Americans—you know I am really an American myself, and a thoroughly loyal one in spite of the fact that circumstances have obliged me to spend most of my life abroad—have made a great advance in their knowledge and appreciation of the arts. This is shown most conspicuously in the architectural improvements in the various cities that I have visited.

"There are fewer monstrosities in the way of buildings now put up for instance, than there were a few years ago, and among the new ones there are some magnificent specimens of architecture. The interiors of the houses, too, show a similar improvement. Instead of using filled with brica-brac of inferior quality and poor etchings, bought at a fabulous price by misguided collectors, I have found [illegible] crowded rooms that furniture is displayed in their adornment. Where formerly the walls would be covered with many poor etchings, I have noticed a very few in the best taste.

"There too, I have noticed a marked change in the physical appearance of the people here. [illegible] seem to have developed and are now healthier and finer looking than they were when I last came. I have observed that the men carry themselves better, walk from the waist, so to speak. I attribute their improvement to the increase in games and physical exercise in general in this country. I presume that this increase is due in part to the fact that American men are now beginning to have a little leisure in which they can devote themselves to other pursuits than those of business.

"There is much to be hoped from the increase of leisure in this country. I have no doubt that a few more years America will have a leisure class, such as each of the old European countries has. Indeed I have already seen signs of its formation. There are at the present time plenty of rich men in New York, who have no business and who spend most of their [illegible] and in sports, which are practically the only resources of the gentleman of leisure here.

"The business pressure in London is in my opinion far greater than in New York; and as for the social whirl New York doesn't compare with Rome. Roman society during the four months of the season is practically no slouch at all. In New York society is far more moderate.

"And this brings me to the subject of the conditions of American life. The most interesting of these conditions in my judgment is the absence [illegible] in the American [illegible] of any [illegible] Anglo-Saxon traditions. They [illegible] these at a gulp, and the [illegible] is like that of taking a pill. Possibly America must make her own traditions, and she has not as yet had time to do this. The American people are still untrammeled, and can develop themselves in a natural and spontaneous manner. The complete absence of tradition here has struck me superficially and yet most forcibly and amusingly in American social customs.

"For example, I can't tell you what a strange sensation I have had when I have dined at luxurious American houses where all the appointments have been of the most magnificent description and where at table I have been confronted with the spectacle of a butler wearing a mustache. No one who has not been brought up abroad knows the iron clad rules of society which prevail in European countries can understand the utter inconsistency of that butler's appearance. As a matter of fact, I don't care a rap about that sort of thing, but nevertheless I can't help being amused by it. The incident I mentioned is only one instance of a large number of incongruities that I have noticed in American society.

"The lack of tradition in America affects even the arts. Every other country has a long established tradition by which its whole artistic life is regulated, but America has [illegible] painting, sculpture and music. We have not thus far produced one great writer. Alongside Emerson, Hawthorne, Lowell and the little group of New England writers of 40 years ago did admirable work, but judged by the standards of Sophocles, Shakespeare, Dante, Goethe and Schiller they must be rated as second class men. Hawthorne was the greatest writer that we have ever produced, but he was only on the fringe of the first class.

"Every country that is every ancient country has had its great artistic era. As a rule it comes only once, though in the case of Rome, through the mingling of foreign blood, there was a renaissance, but this was only a conspicuous exception. Our era, if yet to come, possibly the next century is to produce it. At present America is remarkable chiefly for her great number of second class writers. We are doing work of magnificent mediocrity. The [illegible] of the future will perhaps stand upon our flanks."—New York Tribune.

A Simple Heat Engine.

An ingenious motor for the utilization of the heat rays of the sun or coal direct, thereby obviating the necessity for intervening mechanism of transformation, is said to be the first motor to obtain useful [illegible] sun. A large corrugated drum is filled with an expansible liquid or gas. Inside the drum are vanes, which, on being heated by the expansion of the fluid or gas communicate their motion to a pulley. On putting the apparatus near a fire or in the sun, where one side of only the drum is heated, or on applying a gas jet, varied expansion is caused inside the drum, and the pulley rotates forcibly.—Exchange.

A National Confession.

Mabel had been on a long journey with her aunt, and while visiting in a Jersey town she contracted malaria and was quite ill on reaching home. Not long afterward her mamma had a chill. A lady hearing of it said: "Why, you ought not to have malaria living on such high ground." "Oh," spoke up Mabel, "I guess mamma inherits it from me."—Youth's Companion.

Educational Exhibit of the Fair.

The educational exhibit is well advanced and [illegible] things in it will bear close inspection. This is especially true of that of Pratt institute, of Brooklyn. This is an industrial school and the specimens of work in all the practical arts are excellent. They show what a pupil in school can be taught to do in architecture, building, plumbing, iron work, millinery, dressmaking, etc. The exhibit is presented with good taste.

The Quesknht Indians.

Quesknht Indians from British Columbia have taken up their abode at the exposition grounds.

A Disastrous Appearance.

Kit Goodwin says that he was seized almost to death during his first appearance, and the story that he tells certainly lends color to that assertion.

"On 1870," he said, "I signed for the season to appear in juvenile roles at the Providence Opera House. In a melodrama called The Bride I was [illegible] who is forcing his unwelcome attention on the girl [illegible]. I thought I was right in it until I made my first speech, and then I discovered my mistake. In the first act I am supposed to suddenly come upon the [illegible] alone, and I deliver this line: 'So, I have you again, my sweet [illegible]. Why do you avoid me thus?' I had not more than delivered that line when the girl turned on me and let out an unearthly screech that scared me to death. It shook every line out of my head, and I stood as if I had been suddenly attacked with lockjaw. The [illegible] was quick to see my plight, however, and she went right on with the play, repeating my lines and then her own. As soon as I saw a chance I made a bolt for the stage door, and with all my makeup on took the next train back to Boston."—New York World.

The Fastest Northern Sea Cow.

In the year 1741 the [illegible] officers discovered gigantic species of cetaceans, or northern sea cows. These enormous manatees were similar in general habits to those of the South American coast and were from [illegible] feet in length and from 30 to 40 feet in girth. They were very stupid, harmless beasts, and lived by browsing on seaweeds and other marine growths near the land. The sailors were not slow in finding out that a sea cow steak beat [illegible] all hollow. From 1741 until 1768 they were the principal food of the sailors and explorers on that coast. That is the reason it is not at all surprising that the northern sea cow never a very numerous [illegible] should become extinct in the short space of 14 years. The last of the giant manatees was killed in September, 1768, a few months less than 14 years after the discovery of the first one.—St. Louis Republic.

Two Things That Scare a Negro.

Two seemingly harmless things excite the fear of the southern negro. One is the cracking of the finger joints; the other is to be stepped over as he lies prone upon the ground. The cracking of the finger joints seems to suggest to the superstitious the [illegible] of a skeleton's bones, while to be stepped over is regarded as likely to bring bad luck to grown folks and to check the growth of children. A half grown negro cowboy will sternly command a playfellow who has stepped over his body to step back, in order that the spell may be removed.—New York Sun.

The Customer Ate Crackers.

"Will you please have those biscuits warmed for me?" asked a patron of a Sixth street restaurant of a waiter one night last week. "Very sorry, sir, but the cook is [illegible] a nap, and I'm not allowed to open the oven doors," replied the knight of the tray. "The customer ate crackers.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Texas Building at the Fair.

Chicago, May 9.—Texas expects to be in line with its splendid building and ready for the reception of visitors within the next thirty days. When completed the Lone Star state structure and its inside features will compare favorably with the exhibits offered by any other state. The building would have been completed long ago had it not been for the delay in the granting of the appropriation for pushing the work. President Tolefree, of the state commission, reached the city a few days ago and has been urging things ahead.
